

AT THE GATHERING
June 16, 2012

By Michael Erlewine (Michael@Erlewine.net)

I stayed up kind of late sitting on the porch talking with people, so I slept in till around 5 AM as opposed to my regular get-up-time or around 2-3 AM, but here I am at last and a little groggy at that.

Yesterday was in the 90s here, I believe, so later afternoon was a windless hot. Lot of people here now, and kids of all ages. All kinds of babies walking around with their moms. And kids, everywhere, often in little packs obviously on a mission. And grown ups, and even a sprinkling of elders, just enough that I don't feel too out of place. After all, as far as I am concerned I will forever be 25 years old inside, so there.

Mostly I did astrology readings for folks. That seems to be what is most interesting about me. So one after another I did twenty minutes to an hour readings, sitting out on a blanket in the shade with my laptop. It was fun and it looks to be even more readings today, since the word gets around. I might have to start with appointments....

Food is good here, all natural and whole. My granddaughter Emma May, about five months old, really makes eye contact with me now and smiles each time. I like that. Her eyes are crystal blue and big. Of course to me she is a sheer beauty. I will try to get a photo today.

I include a few photos, although I have no tools (Lightroom, Photoshop, etc.) that I am used to, so what you get is minimally processed, but hopefully you get the picture.

And this is hug city folks, so don't try to get up and cross any space with people in it because you are going to get hugged. I am an apprentice hugger, have been for years, but I kind of like it.

Here are some photos that say more than words to give you a taste of what is happening here at the Family Weekend.

I hung out at the hives for awhile. The bees were massing at the hive opening trying to warm up before taking off.

A trip down into the middle of the herd of Scottish Highland cattle was great.

One of many circles this weekend, all about kids. This is about as round as it got, because Seth and May had the kids acting out dinosaurs, and all kinds of things, and they were all over the place. Kids really like to have fun. What happened that I can't have that much fun anymore?

Storytelling and songs by the fire in the evening. This went on long after I retired to the porch for a gab session.

A real treat for me was one of my favorite musicians. Dick Siegel who did a set. Siegel is a folk/jazz artist that just sings great. Here he is in a duet with my daughter May.
