

ECLIPSE OF THE MOON MONDAY JUNE 4th
June 3, 2012

By Michael Erlewine (Michael@Erlewine.net)

I would like to remind everyone that tomorrow morning at 7:13 AM EDT we will have a partial lunar eclipse, one of two eclipses in the last two weeks, somewhat rare. The Moon will pass through the shadow of the earth giving us a partial eclipse that can be seen on the Pacific side of the planet. The zone of the eclipse will stretch from East Asia to the central parts of North America. You may be able to see it just before sunrise on Monday morning.

As for its meaning, I have written quite a bit, so feel free to scroll down my wall, and do read the Transit of Venus blog, since the two are combined. Keep in mind that the transit of Venus across the face of the Sun means a Venus conjunct Earth/Sun, and all that suggests, which is:

An accent on the feminine, women, love, and loving, a deep appreciation of life. As my Venus Transit blog points out, this is another (one of many in these times) event that heralds the arrival of women in greater possession of themselves and by that fact better able to help the planet with the kind of unconditional love we see between a mother and her child. If we men can behave, maybe we can get a little bit of that love ourselves from women or manifest some as well.

Of course, the feminine side of us is not restricted only to women, but women have best exemplified that for countless centuries, and are regularly reminded of this with each birth. We men have no such recourse or reminder, so take note.

The overall chart pattern points to some outward stress, but a very even inner experience, with perhaps some unusual or at least out-of-the-ordinary insights.

Also folks: Full Moon time.